

15th EU Forestpedagogics Congress

Forests for Human well-being – more important than ever

02.06.2021 (03.06.2021)

© Mireille Feldtrauer

The evidence on the importance of forests and nature areas, as a whole, for human well-being is growing. Forests provide a wide range of ecosystem services and are more than ever important recreation areas for physical activities, stress relief and relaxation.

A ride through the forest, as a place of quietness, can especially be considered as a privileged moment to escape from the daily life in order for reinvigoration. These experiences help people to reconnect with nature and to awaken their senses.

According to the topic, this year's congress aims to emphasize the well-being functions of our forests with a view to stimulate a holistic forest pedagogical approach and to promote cooperation between the different stakeholders.

Unfortunately, due to Covid, the congress cannot take place physically. Nevertheless, it is important to us although to organize the 15th FP congress in a shortened digital version.

© Mireille Feldtrauer